Music in the Air

By Carleton Smith

IF AN artist's only working for money, he's not an artist, he's an entertainer," said EDWARD JOHNSON, General Manager of the Metropolitan, before sailing for Europe. "I was trained abroad myself, and there they have that feeling. It is working for art, for the love of the thing, that we must have. And that is something I want to instill in the artists here."

It is a difficult thing to instill. Most great artists do their best when they perform, regardless of the money they receive. But it takes the pep out of their work to know that someone with less talent than they have, is drawing twice the salary, or that they in another medium, can make ten times the income they are making in grand opera.

That is the problem Metropolitan artists have to face. The opera company cannot pay such enormous salaries as the movie producers whose products reach not 4,000 but 40,000,000 people. The radio sponsor pays more, also, because he has larger coverage. The artist naturally feels pay our way. We must cut our coat according to our cloth. I look forward to the day when opera will be regarded as a great public enterprise, when a generous government or large foundations will subsidize it. But now we must pay.

"The contracts are just in negotiation, that's all. There has been some rumor, I understand, that a difficulty has arisen over radio and other such outside contracts. Of course, we like to have our artists to ourselves, but still we shall pursue the generous policy that Mr. Gatti did. It's a matter of money, and that's something I have been thinking of. This feeling of mine, this feeling that music must be supported; is bigger and more important than money."

"I feel," said Mr. Johnson gayly, "that we're all just one great and organization than he.

He owes his popularity to his own artistic accomplishments, his modesty and his good sense. Everyone wishes him well in the coming season, which he will begin with the confidence and liking of a large sector of the opera-loving public.

Mlle. ODETTE MYRTIL will start the season the 19th with a weekly broadcast (NBC, Mondays at 8 p. m. EDT; 7 EST; 7 CDT; 6 CST; 5 MST; 4 PST). An accomplished musician, capable of giving us the great art songs of France, she probably will be requested to confine her activities to the trite bits of sentimentality which night club patrons have grown to associate with the French. It's a great pity that we never are allowed to hear the great French music,
